Fellow Seniors:

I would first like to say how fortunate we are to be graduating from the new Delehanty in our nation's bicentennial year. These four years were probably the most important years in our lives. Our high school education has helped to prepare us for the future. In one sense, I feel very happy to leave the congenial life at Delehanty in order to explore new horizons in education. But yet, I can honestly say that I will miss the great teachers and the underclassmen. Most of all, I will miss you, the seniors, with whom I experienced many good times and even some bad times. Finally, when we look at this book in the future, let's remember the good teachers we had, the good times we had, but most of all, let's remember each other.
